

It's about «offer[ing] some small-time help, which really only serves my own purposes.»

– Renzo Martens

I am not implying that we only give out of sheer self-interest. However, is the greatest benefit that comes out of these actions of benevolence not often our own being (read: feeling like) a better person?

You are invited to donate and thus experience the privilege of feeling empathy, of showing compassion. To explore whether it makes you feel better and more innocent of the recipient's unfortunate situation.

The collected donations will be handed over to the person who inhabits the depicted beggar spot.